sim·i·le (sim'ə·lē) n. A rhetorical figure expressing comparison or likeness, by the use of such terms as like, as, so, etc.: distinguished from metaphor and comparison proper. [< L, neut. of similis similar]

Synonyms: comparison, figure, illustration, image, imagery, likeness, metaphor, similitude, symbol. The simile carries its note of comparison on the surface, in the words as, like, such as, or similar expressions; the metaphor is given directly without any note of comparison. "God is like a rock" is a simile; "God is a rock" is a metaphor. In order that a comparison may become a simile, objects of different classes must be compared, bringing in some imaginative element. To say, "The Hudson is like the Rhine" is not simile, but direct and literal comparison; but to say, "The Hudson flows like the march of time" is to lift the river out of its class and associate it with a great elemental conception, and thus to transform the comparison into a simile. Similitude is broader in meaning than simile or metaphor, and may include direct and literal comparison. Compare ALLEGORY, ANALOGY, EMBLEM.

Synonyms (noun): brief, delineation, draft, drawing, outline, picture, plan, skeleton. An outline gives only the bounding or determining lines of a figure or a scene; a sketch may give lines, shading and color, but is hasty and incomplete. The lines of a sketch are seldom so full and continuous as those of an outline. Draft and plan apply especially to mechanical drawing, of which outline, sketch, and drawing are also used; a plan is strictly a view from above, as of a building or machine, giving the lines of a horizontal section, originally at the level of the ground, now in a wider sense at any height; as, a plan of the cellar; a plan of the attic. A design is such a preliminary sketch as indicates the object to be accomplished or the result to be attained, and is understood to be original. One may make a drawing of any well-known mechanism, or a drawing from another man's design; but if he says "The design is mine," he claims it as his own invention or composition. In written composition an outline gives simply the main divisions, and is often called a skeleton; a somewhat fuller suggestion of illustration, treatment, and style is given in a sketch. A lawyer's brief is a succinct statement of the main facts in a case, and of the main heads of his argument on points of law, with reference to authorities. Synonyms (noun): emissary, scout. The scout and the spy are both employed to obtain information of the numbers, movements, etc., of an enemy. The scout lurks on the outskirts of the hostile army with such concealment as the case admits of, but without disguise; a spy enters in disguise within the enemy's lines. A scout, if captured, has the rights of a prisoner of war; a spy is held to have forfeited all rights, and is liable, in case of capture, to capital punishment. Soldiers not in disguise or military aviators are not considered spies, even while passing through or over hostile territory. An emissary is rather political than military, sent to influence opponents secretly rather than to bring information concerning them.

standard time Civil time as reckoned from a certain meridian officially established as standard over a large area. Reckoning from the meridian of Greenwich, each time zone, comprising a sector of 15 degrees of longitude, is considered to represent a time interval of one hour, although in practice these zones are adjusted to meet various geographic and other regional conditions, as along the International Date Line. See table above. In the conterminous United States the four standard time zones are the Eastern, Central, Mountain, and Pacific, using respectively the mean local time of the 75th, 90th, 105th, and 120th meridians west of Greenwich, and being 5, 6, 7, and 8 hours slower or earlier than Greenwich time. Canada has in addition a fifth zone, the Atlantic (or Provincial), based on the local time of the 60th meridian, which is 4 hours earlier than Greenwich time. See also TIME ZONE.

STANDARD TIME IN PRINCIPAL CITIES

Referred to noon in Washington, D.C. (Time Zone +5) and in Greenwich, England (Time Zone 0). Times have been calculated to the even hour, disregarding a few deviations (up to 30 minutes) resulting from local time-zone adjustments. All hours are for the same day except as indicated by (*) when the time is for the following day. Compare the table under TIME ZONE for explanation of the plus and minus factor in column 4.

Synonyms: hint, innuendo, insinuation, intimation. A suggestion brings something before the mind less directly than by formal or explicit statement, as by a partial statement, an incidental allusion, an illustration, a question, or the like. Suggestion is often used of an unobtrusive statement of one's views or wishes to another, leaving consideration and any consequent action entirely to that person's judgment, and is hence, in many cases, the most respectful way in which to convey one's views to a superior or a stranger. An intimation is a suggestion in brief utterance, or sometimes by significant act, gesture, or token, of one's meaning or wishes; in the latter case it is often the act of a superior. A hint is still more limited in expression and more remote, and is always covert, but frequently with good intent; as, to give one a hint of danger or of opportunity. Insinuation and innuendo usually imply discredit; an insinuation is a covert or partly veiled injurious utterance; an innuendo is commonly secret as well as sly, as if pointing to something derogatory. Synonyms: alike, correspondent, corresponding, equivalent, identical, interchangeable, like, same, similar, synonymic. In the strictest sense, synonymous words scarcely exist; rarely, if ever, are any two words in any language equivalent or identical in meaning; where a difference in meaning cannot be easily shown, a difference in usage, often involving connotation, usually exists, so that the words are not interchangeable. By synonymous words we usually understand words that coincide or nearly coincide in some part of their meaning, and may hence within certain limits be used interchangeably, while outside of these limits they may differ very greatly in meaning and use. To consider synonymous words identical is fatal to accuracy; to forget that they are similar, to some extent equivalent, and sometimes interchangeable, is destructive of freedom and variety.

sy·non·y·my (si·non′ə·mē) n. pl. ·mies 1 The quality of being synonymous; the expressing or extending of an idea by the use of synonyms. 2 The science or systematic collection and study of synonyms; the use and nice discrimination of synonyms: also syn·o·nym·ics (sin′ə·nim′iks). 3 A book treating of or discriminating the meaning of synonyms or of allied terms. 4 An index, list, or collection of synonyms, as in scientific nomenclature. [<L tensus, pp. of tendere stretch] —tense'ly adv. —tense'ness n.

tense[2] (tens) n. A form of a verb that relates it to time viewed either as finite past, present, or future, or as non–finite. —sequence of tenses In inflected languages, the customary choice of tense for ▪ verb that follows another in a sentence, particularly in reported or indirect discourse. ✦ The general principle of sequence of tenses in English is that present follows present and past follows past. Thus, the tense of the subordinate clause tends to shift back to agree with the tense of the main verb. "He wants to go," becomes, in indirect discourse, "They said that he wanted to go." However, if continued, habitual, future, or universal action is expressed, the present tense may be retained in the subordinate clause: They told me that he is still in town; Columbus proved that the world is round. The present tense is also retained in the subordinate clause for emphasis: They just learned he is going after all. In subordinate clauses of purpose the general rule of tense sequence holds true: We are working so that we can go to Europe; We worked so that we could go to Europe. In conditional sentences expressing a simple fact or open question, the main and subordinate verbs remain independent: If he said that, I can't prove it. However, sequence of tenses is strictly observed in a highly improbable or contrary–to–fact statement. Time present is then expressed by the use of the past tense: If he had any sense, he wouldn't drive that car. Time past is expressed by the past perfect tense: If I had had my wits about me, I would have telephoned immediately. [<OF tens <L tempus time, tense]

[<OF terme <L terminus a limit]

Synonyms (noun): article, condition, expression, member, name, phrase, word. Term in its figurative use always retains something of its literal sense of a boundary or limit. The articles of a contract or other instrument are simply the portions into which it is divided for convenience; the terms are the essential statements on which its validity depends—as it were, the landmarks of its meaning or power; a condition is a contingent term, which may become fixed upon the happening of some contemplated event. In logic a term is one of the essential members of a proposition, the boundary of statement in some one direction. Thus in general use term is more restricted than word, expression, or phrase; a term is a word that limits meaning to a fixed point of statement or to a special class of subjects; as, when we speak of the definition of terms, that is of the key words in any discussion; or we say "that is a legal or scientific term." See BOUNDARY, DICTION.

The·o·bald (thē'ə·bôld, tib'əld; Dan. tā'ō·bäl, Ger. tā'ō·bält, Sw. tā'ō·bäld) A masculine personal name. Also Lat. The·o·bal·dus (tā'ō·bôl'dəs), Pg. The·o·bal·do (tā'ōo·bäl'thōō), Sp. The·u·de·bal·do (tā'ōō·thā·väl'thō). [<Gmc., bold patriot]

The·o·bro·ma (thē'ə·brō'mə) n. A genus of small trees indigenous in tropical America, especially Theobroma cacao, source of the cocoa and chocolate of commerce, now cultivated also in the Old World tropics. [<NL <Gk. theos god + brōma food] the·o·bro·mine (thē'ə·brō'mēn, -min) n. Chem. A bitter, colorless, crystalline alkaloid, $C_7H_8N_4O_2$, resembling caffeine, contained in cacao beans: used in medicine as a diuretic and myocardial stimulant. [<THEOBROM(A) + -INE²] the·o·cen·tric (thē'ə·sen'trik) adj. Having God for its center; proceeding from and returning to God.

the·oc·ra·cy (thē·ok'rə·sē) n. pl. ·cies 1 A state, polity, or group of people that claims a deity as its ruler, as ancient Israel after the Exodus. 2 Government of a state by a god, or by a priestly class claiming to have divine authority, as in the Papacy. [<Gk. theokratia < theos god + krateein rule] — the·o·crat·ic (thē'ə·krat'ik) or ·i·cal adj.

the·oc·ra·sy (thē·ok'rə·sē) n. 1 The mingling of several deities or divine attributes in one personality. 2 The mystical intimacy or union of the soul with God. [<LGk. theokrasia <Gk. theos god + krasis mingling] the·o·crat (thē'ə·krat) n. 1 A theocratic or divine ruler. 2 An advocate of theocracy.

The·oc·ri·tus (thē·ok'rə·təs) Greek pastoral poet of the third century B.C.

the·od·i·cy (thē·od'ə·sē) n. pl. ·cies 1 Justification of the divine providence by the attempt to reconcile the existence of evil with the goodness and sovereignty of God: a term established by Leibnitz in 1710. 2 The branch of philosophy that treats of the being, perfections, and government of God and the immortality of the soul. [<F théodicée <Gk. theos god + dikē justice] the·od·o·lite (thē·od'ə·līt) n. One of several surveying and astronomical instruments for measuring horizontal and vertical angles by means of a small telescope turning on both a horizontal and a vertical axis. [An arbitrary formation] — the·od'o·lit'ic (-lit'ik) adj.

The·o·dore (thē'ə·dôr, -dōr) A masculine personal name. Also Dan., Ger., Sw. The·o·dor (tā'ō·dôr), Fr. Thé·o·dore (tā·ô·dôr'), Gk. The·o·do·ros (thē·o'dō·ros), Du. The·o·do·rus (tā'ō·dôr'əs). [<Gk., gift of God] — The·o·do·ra (thē'ə·dôr'ə) fem.

The·od·o·ric (thē·od'ər·ik) A masculine personal name. Also The·od'e·rick, The·od'o·rick, Fr. Thé·o·do·ric (tā·ô·dō·rēk'), Ger. The·o·do·rich (tā·ō'dō·rikh), Lat. The·o·do·ri·cus (tā'ō·də·rī'kəs). [<Gmc., ruler of the people] — Theodoric, 454?–526, king of the Ostrogoths; invaded and conquered Italy.

The·o·do·si·us (thē'ə·dō'shē·əs), 346?–395, Roman emperor 379–395.

the·og·o·ny (thē·og'ə·nē) n. The generation or genealogy of the gods, especially as recited in ancient poetry. [<Gk. theogonia < theos god + gonos generation < gignesthai be born] — the·o·gon·ic (thē'ə·gon'ik) adj. — the·og'o·nist n.

the·o·log (thē'ə·lôg, -log) n. A theological student. Also the'o·logue. [<L theologus <Gk. theologos one who treats of the gods < theos god + logos discourse < legein speak] the·o·lo·gi·an (thē'ə·lō'jē·ən, -jən) n. One versed in theology, especially that of the Christian church; a professor of divinity; a divine.

the·o·log·i·cal (thē'ə·loj'i·kəl) adj. 1 Pertaining or relating to theology. 2 Linked to, based on, or referring to divine revelation. 3 Pertaining to the exposition or expounders of theology. Also the'o·log'ic. — the'o·log'i·cal·ly adv.

théological virtues See under VIRTUE.

the·ol·o·gize (thē·ol'ə·jīz) v. ·gized, ·giz·ing v.t. To devise or fit (something) into a system of theology. — v.i. To reason theologically. Also Brit. the·ol'o·gise.

the·ol·o·gy (thē·ol'ə·jē) n. pl. ·gies 1 The study of religion, culminating in a synthesis or philosophy of religion; also, a critical survey of religion, especially of the Christian religion. 2 A body of doctrines concerning God, including his attributes and relations with man; especially, such a body of doctrines as set forth by a particular church or religious group: Catholic theology. [<OF theologie <LL theologia <Gk. < theos god + logos discourse] the·om·a·chy (thē·om'ə·kē) n. 1 A combat with the gods, as that waged by the Titans. 2 A battle among the gods. [<Gk. theomachia < theos god + machē combat] the·o·mor·phic (thē'ə·môr'fik) adj. Having the form or likeness of God. [<Gk. theomorphos < theos god + morphē form] the·o·mor·phism (thē'ə·môr'fiz·əm) n. The doctrine that man has the likeness or form of God.

the·o·pa·thet·ic (thē'ō·pə·thet'ik) adj. Pertaining to or of the nature of theopathy: theopathetic mysticism. Also the·o·path·ic (thē'ə·path'ik).

the·op·a·thy (thē·op'ə·thē) n. Religious emotion aroused by meditation on God; mystical ecstasy. [<Gk. theopathia the suffering of God < theos a god + path-, stem of paschein suffer] the·oph·a·ny (thē·of'ə·nē) n. pl. ·nies A manifestation or appearance of a deity or of the gods to man. [<L theophania <Gk. < theos god + phainein show]

The·oph·i·lus (thē·of'ə·ləs; Du., Ger. tā·ō'fē·lōōs) A masculine personal name. Also Fr. Théo·phile (tā·ō·fēl'), Pg. The·o·phi·lo (tā·ō'fē·lōō). [<Gk., lover of God]

The·o·phras·tus (thē'ə·fras'təs), 372?–287? B.C., Greek philosopher.

the·o·phyl·line (thē'ə·fil'ēn, -in) n. Chem. A white, bitter, crystalline alkaloid, $C_7H_8O_2N_4$, obtained from tea leaves and also made synthetically: it is an isomer of theobromine. [<NL thea tea + Gk. phyllon leaf + -INE²]

a. Striding level. b. Vertical limb and vernier. c. Telescope. d. Plate bubble. e. Horizontal limb and vernier. f. Clamp and tangent screw. g. Lower clamp screw. h. Tangent screw. i. Leveling screw.

the·or·bo (thē·ôr'bō) n. A 17th century lute having two necks. [<F théorbe <Ital. tiorba, prob. after the name of the inventor] the·o·rem (thē'ər·əm, thir'əm) n. 1 A proposition demonstrably true or acknowledged as such. 2 Math. ■ A proposition setting forth something to be proved. b A proposition that has been proved or assumed to be true. c A rule or statement of relations formulated in symbols. [<F théorème <Gk. theōrēma sight, theory < theōreein look at] — the·o·re·mat·ic (thē'ər·ə·mat'ik), the'o·rem'ic (-ə·rem'ik) adj.

the·o·ret·ic (thē'ə·ret'ik) n. 1 Theory, as distinct from practice. 2 pl. Theoretical matters; specifically, the theoretical aspect of a science. — adj. Theoretical.

the·o·ret·i·cal (thē'ə·ret'i·kəl) adj. 1 Of, relating to, or consisting of theory. 2 Relating to knowledge or pure science without reference to its application: compare EXPERIMENT (def. 3). 3 Existing only in theory; hypothetical. 4 Addicted to theorizing; unaffected by practical considerations; hence, impractical; visionary. Also theoretic. — the'o·ret'i·cal·ly adv.

the·o·re·ti·cian (thē'ər·ə·tish'ən) n. One who deals with the speculative, hypothetical, or ideal rather than with the practical and executive aspects of a subject.

the·o·rist (thē'ər·ist) n. One who theorizes.

the·o·rize (thē'ə·rīz) v.i. ·rized, ·riz·ing To form or express theories; speculate. Also Brit. the'·o·rise. — the'o·ri·za'tion n. — the'o·riz'er n.

the·o·ry (thē'ər·ē, thir'ē) n. pl. ·ries 1 A plan or scheme existing in the mind only, but based on principles verifiable by experiment or observation. 2 A body of the fundamental principles underlying a science or the application of a science: the theory of relativity. 3 Abstract knowledge of any art, as opposed to the practice of it. ■ A proposed explanation or hypothesis designed to account for any phenomenon. 5 Loosely, mere speculation or hypothesis; an individual idea or guess. 6 Math. An arrangement of results, or a body of theorems, presenting a systematic view of some subject: the theory of functions. 7 The science of musical composition, as distinguished from the art of execution. See synonyms under HYPOTHESIS, IDEA. [<F théorie <Gk. theōria view, speculation < theōreein look at] the·os·o·phy (thē·os'ə·fē) n. Mystical speculation applied to deduce a philosophy of the universe. In its modern phase, a system that claims to embrace the essential truth underlying all systems of religion, science, and philosophy. Its doctrines resemble closely those of Buddhism and Brahmanism, teaching the existence of an omnipotent, infinite, eternal, and immutable principle transcending the power of human conception, and the identity of all souls, through the cycle of incarnation with a universal spirit. [<Med. L theosophia <Gk. < theosophos wise in divine matters < theos god + sophos wise] — the·o·soph·ic (thē'ə·sof'ik) or ·i·cal adj. — the'o·soph'i·cal·ly adv. — the·os'o·phist n.

The·o·to·co·pu·li (tā'ō·tō·kō'pōō·lē), Domenico See GRECO, EL.

The·ra (thir'ə, thē'rə) The southernmost island of the Cyclades in the Aegean; 31 square miles: formerly Santorin.

ther·a·peu·tic (ther'ə·pyōō'tik) adj. 1 Having healing qualities; curative. 2 Pertaining to therapeutics. Also ther'a·peu'ti·cal. [<NL therapeuticus <Gk. therapeutikos < therapeutēs an attendant < therapeuein serve, take care of < therapōn an attendant] — ther'a·peu'ti·cal·ly adv.

therapeutic dose That quantity of a drug which will produce the greatest beneficial effect in the given instance; the optimal dose.

ther·a·peu·tics (ther'ə·pyōō'tiks) n. pl. (construed as singular) 1 The department of medical science that treats of remedies for disease and their application. 2 The art and science of healing. — ther'a·peu'tist n.

ther·a·py (ther'ə·pē) n. pl. ·pies 1 The treatment of disease by drugs or other curative processes: chiefly used in compounds: hydrotherapy. 2 Healing or curative quality. [<NL therapia <Gk. therapeia < therapeuein take care of. See THERAPEUTIC.] — ther'a·pist n.

there (thâr) adv. 1 In or at that place; in a place other than that of the speaker: opposed to here. 2 To, toward, or into that place; thither. 3 At that stage or point of action or proceeding. 4 In that respect, relation, or connection. [OE thǣr]

• There is also used: as a pronominal expletive introducing a clause or sentence, the subject usually following the verb: There once lived three bears; with independent phrases or clauses, as an equivalent of that, expressing encouragement, approval, etc.: There's a little dear; as an exclamation expressing triumph, etc.: There! I told you so.

there·a·bout (thâr′ə·bout′) adv. Near that number, quantity, degree, place, or time; approximately. Also there′a·bouts′.

there·af·ter (thâr′af′tər, -äf′-) adv. 1 Afterward; from that time on. 2 Accordingly.

there·a·gainst (thâr′ə·genst′) adv. Against or in opposition to that thing; on the other hand.

there·at (thâr′at′) adv. At that event, place, or time; at that incentive; upon that.

there·by (thâr′bī′) adv. 1 Through the agency of that. 2 Connected with that. 3 Conformably to that. 4 Nearby; thereabout. 5 By it or that; into possession of it or that: How did you come thereby?

there·for (thâr′fôr′) adv. For this, that, or it; in return or requital for this or that: We return thanks therefor.

there·fore (thâr′fôr′, -fōr′) adv. & conj. For that or this reason; on that ground or account; hence; consequently: He did not run fast enough; therefore he lost the race.

Synonyms (conj.): accordingly, because, consequently, hence, since, then, thence, whence, wherefore. Therefore is the most precise and formal word for expressing the direct conclusion of a chain of reasoning; then carries a similar but slighter sense of inference, which it gives incidentally rather than formally; as, If this is true, then we can go. Consequently denotes a direct result, but more frequently of a practical than a theoretical kind; as, Important matters demand my attention; consequently I shall not sail today. Accordingly denotes correspondence, which may or may not be consequence; it is often used in narration; as, The soldiers were eager and confident; accordingly they sprang forward at the word of command. Thence is a word of more sweeping inference than therefore, applying not merely to a single set of premises but often to all that has gone before, including the reasonable inferences that have not been formally stated. Wherefore is the correlative of therefore, and whence of hence or thence, appending the inference or conclusion to the previous statement without a break. Compare synonyms for BECAUSE.

there·from (thâr′frum′, -from′) adv. From this, that, or it; from this or that time, place, state, event, or thing.

there·in (thâr′in′) adv. 1 In that place. 2 In that time, matter, or respect.

there·in·af·ter (thâr′in·af′tər, -äf′-) adv. In a subsequent part of that (book, document, speech, etc.).

there·in·to (thâr′in·tōō′) adv. Into this, that, or it.

Ther·e·min (ther′ə·min) n. A musical instrument played by manual interference with two sets of radio-frequency waves issuing from a pair of oscillators adapted for tone variation and volume control: a trade name. [after Léon Thérémin, born 1896, Russian-French inventor] there·of (thâr′uv′, -ov′) adv. 1 Of or relating to this, that, or it. 2 From or because of this or that cause or particular; therefrom.

there·on (thâr′on′, -ôn′) adv. 1 On this, that, or it. 2 Thereupon; thereat.

there's (thârz) There is: a contraction.

The·re·sa (tə·rē′sə, -rez′ə) A feminine personal name. Also Fr. Thé·rèse (tā·rez′). [<Gk., harvester] — Saint Theresa of Ávila, 1515–82, Spanish Carmelite nun and mystic: also Teresa.

there·to (thâr′tōō′) adv. 1 To this, that, or it. 2 In addition; furthermore. Also there′·un·to′ (-un·tōō′).

there·to·fore (thâr′tə·fôr′, -fōr′) adv. Before this or that; previously to that.

there·un·der (thâr′un′dər) adv. 1 Under this or that. 2 Less, as in number. 3 In a lower or lesser status or rank.

there·up·on (thâr′ə·pon′, -ə·pôn′) adv. 1 Upon that; upon it. 2 Following upon or in consequence of that. 3 Immediately following; at once.

there·with (thâr′with′, -with′) adv. 1 With this, that, or it. 2 Thereupon; thereafter; immediately afterward.

there·with·al (thâr′with·ôl′) adv. 1 With all this or that; besides. 2 Obs. Therewith; with this, that, or it.

the·ri·a·ca (thi·rī′ə·kə) n. 1 An ancient antidote for the bite of venomous creatures, containing numerous drugs mixed with honey. 2 Molasses; treacle. Also the·ri·ac (thir′ē·ak). [<LL theriaca, an antidote for poison <Gk. thēriakos pertaining to wild beasts <thērion, dim. of thēr wild beast] — the·ri′a·cal adj.

the·ri·an·thro·pism (thir′ē·an′thrə·piz′əm) n. Representation of preternatural beings in combined forms of man and beast, especially in primitive polytheistic worship: the religions of therianthropism. [<Gk. thērion wild beast + anthrōpos, -ōpou man] — the′ri·an·throp′ic (-an·throp′ik) adj.

the·ri·o·mor·phic (thir′ē·ə·môr′fik) adj. Beastlike in form: theriomorphic gods. Also the′ri·o·mor′phous. [<Gk. thērion wild beast + morphē form] therm (thûrm) n. 1 A unit of heat used as a basis for the sale of illuminating gas in England, equal to 100,000 British thermal units. 2 One thousand great calories. 3 The great calorie. 4 The lesser calorie. Also therme. [<Gk. thermē heat] therm- Var. of THERMO-.

Ther·ma (thûr′mə) Ancient name for THESSALONIKE.

ther·mae (thûr′mē) n. pl. 1 Hot springs or baths. 2 Specifically, the public baths of the ancient Romans; also, the bathhouses. [<L <Gk. thermai, pl. of thermē heat] ther·mal (thûr′məl) adj. 1 Pertaining to, determined by, or measured by heat. 2 Hot or warm. Also ther′mic. — ther′mal·ly adv.

thermal barrier Aeron. The limit imposed upon the operating speed of jet engines, rockets, motors, and the like by temperatures above the melting point of their materials.

thermal death Heat death.

thermal diffusion 1 The diffusion of heat. 2 Physics A method for the separation of isotopes by passing a gas through a vertical tube containing an electrically heated wire which produces a concentration of the heavier components at the bottom and of the lighter components at the top.

therm·an·es·the·sia (thûr′mən·is·thē′zhə, -zhē·ə) n. Pathol. Loss of ability to recognize sensations of heat or cold; absence of temperature sense. Also therm′an·aes·the′sia. [<THERM(O)- + ANESTHESIA] therm·el (thûr′mel) n. A thermocouple or group of thermocouples when used to determine temperatures. [<Gk. thermē heat] therm·es·the·sia (thûr′mis·thē′zhə, -zhē·ə) n. Physiol. The ability to recognize changes of temperature; temperature sensitivity. Also therm′aes·the′sia. [<THERM(O)- + ESTHESIA]

Ther·mi·dor (thûr′mə·dôr′, Fr. ter·mē·dôr′) See under CALENDAR (Republican). [<F <Gk. thermē heat + dōron gift] therm·i·on (thûrm′ī′ən, thûr′mē·ən) n. Physics An electrically charged particle emitted by a heated body: it may be either positive or negative. [<THERM(O)- + ION] — therm·i·on·ic (thûr′mē·on′ik) adj.

therm·i·on·ics (thûr′mē·on′iks) n. pl. (construed as singular) The science and practical application of thermionic phenomena.

thermionic tube A vacuum tube emitting thermions from a heated electrode. Also Brit. thermionic valve.

therm·is·tor (thər·mis′tər) n. Electr. A small, compact thermometric device consisting of a semiconducting material having a large temperature coefficient of resistance: widely used in the measurement of microwave power, of temperatures, and as a protective device in circuits. [<THERM(O)- + (RES)ISTOR] ther·mit (thûr′mit) n. A mixture composed of finely divided aluminum and oxide of iron, chromium, or manganese. When such a mixture is brought to a sufficient temperature, the oxygen of the oxide unites with the aluminum, producing an intense heat. Also ther′mite (-mīt). [<Gk. thermē heat] thermo- combining form Heat; of, related to, or caused by heat: thermolysis, thermostat. Also, before vowels, therm-. [<Gk. thermos heat, warmth] ther·mo·bar·o·graph (thûr′mō·bar′ə·graf, -gräf) n. An apparatus for measuring the pressure and temperature of a gas simultaneously.

ther·mo·ba·rom·e·ter (thûr′mō·bə·rom′ə·tər) n. 1 An apparatus for measuring atmospheric pressure by the boiling point of water: used in determining altitudes. 2 A form of barometer that can be inverted and made to serve as a thermometer.

ther·mo·cau·ter·y (thûr′mō·kô′tər·ē) n. Cautery by means of heated wires or points.

ther·mo·chem·is·try (thûr′mō·kem′is·trē) n. The branch of chemistry that treats of the relations between chemical reactions and the evolution and absorption of heat observed to accompany them. — ther′mo·chem′i·cal (-kem′i·kəl) adj. — ther′mo·chem′ist n.

ther·mo·cline (thûr′mō·klīn) n. A gradient indicating marked changes in temperature with depth, especially between discontinuous layers of ocean waters.

ther·mo·cou·ple (thûr′mō·kup′əl) n. A pair of dissimilar metals so joined as to produce a thermoelectric effect when the contact surfaces are at different temperatures. Also ther′mo·e·lec′tric couple.

ther·mo·dy·nam·ics (thûr′mō·dī·nam′iks, -di-) n. pl. (construed as singular) That branch of physical science which treats of the relations between heat and energy, especially the convertibility of one into the other and the mechanical work involved. — ther′mo·dy·nam′ic or ·i·cal adj. — ther′mo·dy·nam′i·cist (-nam′ə·sist) n.

ther·mo·e·lec·tric (thûr′mō·i·lek′trik) adj. Of or pertaining to thermoelectricity. Also ther′mo·e·lec′tri·cal. — ther′mo·e·lec′tri·cal·ly adv.

ther·mo·e·lec·tric·i·ty (thûr′mō·i·lek′tris′ə·tē) n. Electricity generated by differences of temperature, especially between two different metals in contact when one of the junctions is heated.

ther·mo·e·lec·tro·mo·tive (thûr′mō·i·lek′trə·mō′tiv) adj. Of, pertaining to, or designating electromotive force caused by difference of temperature.

ther·mo·gal·va·nom·e·ter (thûr′mō·gal′və·nom′ə·tər) n. A combination of a galvanometer and a thermocouple used to measure minute variations of temperature.

ther·mo·gen·e·sis (thûr′mō·jen′ə·sis) n. The production of heat, especially of animal heat by organic action. — ther′mo·gen′ic, ther·mog·e·nous (thər·moj′ə·nəs), ther′mo·ge·net′ic (-jə·net′ik) adj.

ther·mo·gram (thûr′mə·gram) n. The record made by a thermograph.

ther·mo·graph (thûr′mə·graf, -gräf) n. An instrument for recording temperature variations; a self-registering thermometer.

ther·mog·ra·phy (thər·mog′rə·fē) n. 1 Photography by means of heat waves emitted by an object which has been coated with luminescent paint and exposed to ultraviolet light. 2 Printing Any process of reproducing written or printed characters that employs heat. — ther·mo·graph·ic (thûr′mə·graf′ik) adj.

ther·mo·hal·ine (thûr′mō·hal′ēn, -in, -in) adj. Pertaining to or characterized by variations in the temperature and salinity of sea water. [<THERMO- + Gk. hals salt + -INE¹] ther·mo·junc·tion (thûr′mō·jungk′shən) n. The point of contact between the pair of conductors forming a thermocouple.

ther·mo·kin·e·mat·ics (thûr′mō·kin′ə·mat′iks) n. pl. (construed as singular) The study of heat in motion or of the motive power of heat.

ther·mo·la·bile (thûr′mō·lā′bil) adj. Biochem. Decomposed, destroyed, affected, or liable to be adversely affected by heat, as some enzymes and toxins: opposed to thermostable. [<THERMO- + LABILE]

ther·mo·lu·mi·nes·cence (thûr′mō·lōō′mə·nes′əns) n. 1 The emission of light from a substance or material under the action of heat. 1 A luminous effect in rock crystals from which electrons displaced by radioactivity have been released at definite temperatures, with or without pressure: sometimes indicative of the age of sedimentary rocks. — ther'mo·lu'mi·nes'cent adj.

ther·mol·y·sis (thər·mol'ə·sis) n. 1 Chem. The resolution of a compound substance into its component elements by the application of heat. 2 Physiol. The dissipation of heat from the animal body by physical processes. [< THERMO- + -LYSIS] — ther·mo·lyt·ic (thûr'mə·lit'ik) adj.

ther·mo·mag·net·ic (thûr'mō·mag·net'ik) adj. Of or pertaining to the relations between heat and magnetism.

ther·mom·e·ter (thər·mom'ə·tər) n. An instrument for measuring the temperature of a substance, body, or space. The ordinary thermometer consists of a graduated glass capillary tube or stem with a bulb containing mercury which expands or contracts as the temperature rises or falls. The differential thermometer has two air bulbs connected by a U-tube, containing colored liquid, so that when the bulbs are exposed to different temperatures a shifting of the liquid in the tube will be caused by the difference of expansion of air in the bulbs. A resistance thermometer indicates, by means of the change in electrical conductivity of wires with temperature, the temperature of any given wire or its environment. — clinical thermometer A thermometer accurately calibrated for determining body temperature, especially of a person. [<THERMO- + METER] ther·mom·e·try (thər·mom'ə·trē) n. The measurement of temperature, or the art thereof, by means of the thermometer; specifically, the use of the thermometer in medical diagnosis. — ther·mo·met·ric (thûr'mō·met'rik) or ·ri·cal adj. — ther'mo·met'ri·cal·ly adv.

ther·mo·mo·tor (thûr'mō·mō'tər) n. A heat engine; especially, a hot-air engine. Compare MOTOR.

ther·mo·nu·cle·ar (thûr'mō·nōō'klē·ər, -nyōō'-) adj. Physics Pertaining to or characterized by the mass-energy reactions involving the fusion of light atomic nuclei subjected to very high temperatures, especially with reference to stellar energy and the hydrogen bomb.

ther·mo·pen·e·tra·tion (thûr'mō·pen'ə·trā'shən) n. Diathermy.

ther·mo·phil·ic (thûr'mō·fil'ik) adj. Fond of heat: used mainly of certain bacteria. Also ther'mo·phile (-fīl, -fil). [<THERMO- + Gk. philos loving] ther·mo·pile (thûr'mō·pīl) n. A group of thermocouples acting jointly to produce electric energy, especially when used with a galvanometer to measure heat.

ther·mo·plas·tic (thûr'mō·plas'tik) adj. Plastic in the presence of or under the application of heat: said especially of certain synthetic molding materials. — n. A thermoplastic substance or material.

Ther·mop·y·lae (thər·mop'ə·lē) A narrow mountain pass in Greece; scene of a battle, 480 B.C., in which the Spartans under the command of Leonidas held off the Persians under Xerxes and finally died to the last man rather than yield.

ther·mo·scope (thûr'mə·skōp) n. An instrument for detecting changes or differences of temperature without accurately measuring them. [<THERMO- + -SCOPE] — ther'mo·scop'ic (-skop'ik) or ·i·cal adj.

ther·mo·set·ting (thûr'mō·set'ing) adj. Having the property of assuming a fixed shape after being molded under heat, as certain phenol and other synthetic resins.

ther·mo·si·phon (thûr'mō·sī'fən) n. A device consisting of siphon tubes to increase or induce circulation by making use of temperature differential in a water-cooling system, as in that of an internal-combustion engine.

ther·mo·sta·ble (thûr'mō·stā'bəl) adj. 1 Resistant to heat, as certain plastics and chemicals. 2 Biochem. Unaffected by moderate heats; denoting immune substances, as certain toxins or ferments, which may be heated to 55° C. without loss of special properties: opposed to thermolabile. Also ther'mo·sta'bile. — ther'mo·sta·bil'i·ty (-stə·bil'ə·tē) n.

ther·mo·stat (thûr'mə·stat) n. A device for the automatic regulation of temperature by means of a relay utilizing the expansion and contraction caused by temperature changes in certain metals: used for actuating fire alarms, opening or closing dampers, regulating steam pressures, etc. [<THERMO- + Gk. statos standing] — ther'mo·stat'ic adj. — ther'mo·stat'i·cal·ly adv.

THERMOSTAT
a. Bimetal bar.
b. Contact points.
c. Control knob.

ther·mo·stat·ics (thûr'mō·stat'iks) n. pl. (construed as singular) The science that deals with the equilibrium of heat.

ther·mo·tank (thûr'mō·tangk') n. A tank or box in which steam, water, air, or the like circulates through pipes and thus heats or cools the air passing through the tank.

ther·mo·tax·is (thûr'mō·tak'sis) n. Biol. 1 The regulation or normal adjustment of the animal heat in an organism. 2 The determination of movement by heat. — ther'mo·tax'ic, ther'mo·tac'tic (-tak'tik) adj.

ther·mo·ten·sile (thûr'mō·ten'sil) adj. Relating to variation of tensile strength caused by temperature.

therm·o·ther·a·py (thûr'mō·ther'ə·pē) n. Med. The treatment of disease by the application of heat.

ther·mot·ics (thər·mot'iks) n. pl. (construed as singular) The science of heat. [<Gk. thermotēs heat] ther·mot·ro·pism (thər·mot'rə·piz'əm) n. Biol. 1 The property or phenomenon of movement in growing plants or other organisms brought about by the influence of heat or cold. 2 The attraction or repulsion from a source of heat evinced by some bacteria. — ther·mo·trop·ic (thûr'mō·trop'ik) adj.

the·roid (thir'oid) adj. Resembling or like a beast. [<Gk. thēroeidēs < thēr, thēros a wild beast + eidos form] thin (thin) adj. thin·ner, thin·nest 1 Having opposite surfaces relatively close to each other; being of little depth or width; not thick. 2 Lacking roundness or plumpness of figure; lean; slender. 3 Having the component parts or particles scattered or diffused; not dense or abundant; sparse; rare: thin ranks, thin gas. 4 Having little body or substance; of a loose texture; hence, insufficient to conceal or cover: thin clothing; flimsy: a thin excuse. 5 Having little or no consistency, as a liquid: thin molasses. 6 Lacking in essential ingredients or qualities: thin blood. 7 Having little volume or richness; shrill or metallic, as a voice. 8 Not abundantly supplied or furnished; bare; scant: a thin table. 9 Not having sufficient contrasts of shade to print well: said of a photographic negative. 10 Lacking vigor or force; feeble; superficial: thin wit. See synonyms under FINE[1], GAUNT, MEAGER. — v.t. & v.i. thinned, thin·ning To make or become thin or thinner. [OE thynne] — thin'ly adv. — thin'ness n.

thine (thīn) pron. 1 The possessive case of thou, used predicatively; belonging or pertaining to thee: Thine is the kingdom. 2 The things or persons belonging or pertaining to thee. — of thine Belonging or relating to thee; thy: the double possessive. — pronominal adj. Archaic Thy: thine eyes. [OE thīn, genitive of thū thou] thing[1] (thing) n. 1 That which exists or is conceived to exist as a separate entity; an entity; being. 2 That which is designated, as contrasted with the word or symbol used to denote it. 3 A matter or circumstance; an affair; concern: Things have changed. 4 An act or deed; transaction: That was a shameless thing to do. 5 A statement or expression; utterance: to say the right thing. 6 An idea; opinion; notion: Stop putting things in her head. 7 A quality; attribute; characteristic: Kindness is a precious thing. 8 An inanimate object, as distinguished from a living organism. 9 An organic being: usually with a qualifying word: Every living thing dies. 10 An object that is not or cannot be described or particularized: The thing disappeared in the shadows. 11 A person, regarded in terms of pity, affection, or contempt: that poor thing; You stupid thing! 12 pl. Possessions; belongings: to pack one's things. 13 pl. Clothes; especially, outer garments: Take off your things and stay awhile. 14 A piece of literature, art, music, etc.: He read a few things by Byron. 15 The proper or befitting act or result: with the: That was not the thing to do. 16 The important or remarkable point: with the: The thing we learned from the war was this. 17 Law A subject or property or dominion, as distinguished from a person. — to do one's (own) thing Slang To express oneself by doing what one wants to do or can do well or is in the habit of doing. — to see things To have hallucinations. [OE, thing, cause, assembly. Akin to THING[2].]

thing[2] (ting) n. A Scandinavian legislative or judicial body: the Storthing, the Norwegian parliament: also spelled ting. [<ON, assembly. Akin to THING[1].]

thing·a·ma·bob (thing'ə·mə·bob') n. Colloq. A thing the specific name of which is unknown or forgotten; a dingus. Also thing'um·a·bob', thing'um·bob.

thing·a·ma·jig (thing'ə·mə·jig') n. Colloq. A thingamabob. Also thing'um·a·jig'.

T-hinge (tē'hinj') n. A hinge the two sections of which have the form of the letter T. See illustration under HINGE.

thing in itself Philos. A noumenon; the ultimate, metaphysical reality behind the physical phenomena perceived by the senses, which, according to Kant, can never be known: the English rendering of the German Ding an sich.

think[1] (thingk) v. thought (thôt), think·ing v.t. 1 To produce or form in the mind; conceive mentally: to think evil thoughts. 2 To examine in the mind; meditate upon, or determine by reasoning: He was thinking what to do next; to think a plan through. 3 To believe; consider: I think him guilty. 4 To expect; anticipate: They did not think to meet us. 5 To bring to mind; remember; recollect: I cannot think what he said. 6 To have the mind preoccupied by: to think business morning, noon, and night. 7 To intend; purpose: Do they think to rob me? — v.i. 8 To use the mind or intellect in exercising judgment, forming ideas, etc.; engage in rational thought; reason. 9 To have a particular opinion, sentiment, or feeling: I don't think so. — to think better of 1 To abandon a course of action; alter one's intentions: I was going to call but I thought better of it. 2 To form a better opinion of. — to think fit, proper, right, etc. To regard as worth doing. — to think nothing of 1 To have a low opinion of; ignore. 2 To consider easy to do. — to think of 1 To bring to mind; remember; recollect. 2 To conceive in the mind; invent; imagine. 3 To have a specified opinion or attitude toward; regard. 4 To be considerate of; have regard for. — to think over To reflect upon; ponder. — to think up To devise, arrive at, or invent by thinking. — n. An act of thinking; a thought. [OE thencean; influenced in form by THINK[2]] think[2] (thingk) v.i. To seem; appear: now obsolete except with the pronoun as indirect object in the combinations methinks, methought. [OE thyncan seem] think·a·ble (thingk'ə·bəl) adj. Susceptible of being thought; conceivable; hence, possible to be believed.

think·er (thingk'ər) n. 1 One who thinks. 2 A person of powerful mind who devotes himself to abstract thought.

think·ing (thingk'ing) adj. 1 Exercising the mental capacities. 2 Capable of such exercise; rational. — n. 1 Mental action; thought. 2 The product of such action, as an idea. See synonyms under REFLECTION, THOUGHT. — think'ing·ly adv.

think tank Colloq. 1 A group of people (think tankers), usually academics, business executives, or government employees, organized for the investigation and study of social, scientific, and technological problems. 2 The place in which such a group works.

thin·ner (thin'ər) n. 1 One who or that which thins. 2 A liquid, as turpentine or petroleum spirits, mixed with paint in order to give it a proper consistency for working.

thin·nish (thin'ish) adj. Somewhat thin.

thin-skinned (thin'skind') adj. 1 Having a thin skin. 2 Hence, easily hurt or offended; sensitive.

thio- combining form Chem. Containing sulfur; denoting a compound of sulfur, especially one in which sulfur has displaced oxygen: thiocyanic. Also, before vowels, sometimes thi-. Compare SULFURO-. [<Gk. theion sulfur] thi·o·a·ce·tic (thī'ō·ə·sē'tik, -ə·set'ik) adj. Chem. Designating a yellow, fuming, pungent acid, C_2H_4OS, used in ammonia solutions as a precipitant of metals. [<THIO- + ACETIC] thi·o·al·co·hol (thī'ō·al'kə·hôl) n. Chem. Thiol.

thi·o·al·de·hyde (thī'ō·al'də·hīd) n. Chem. An aldehyde containing sulfur as a substitute for oxygen.

thi·o·bac·te·ri·um (thī'ō·bak·tir'ē·əm) n. Any of an order (Thiobacteriales) of bacteria which utilize the sulfur of decaying organic matter.

thi·o·car·bam·ide (thī′ō·kär·bam′īd, -id, -kär′·bə·mīd) n. Thiourea. [<THIO- + CARBAMIDE] thi·o·cy·a·nate (thī′ō·sī′ə·nāt) n. Chem. A salt or ester of thiocyanic acid.

thi·o·cy·an·ic (thī′ō·si·an′ik) adj. Chem. Designating or pertaining to a colorless liquid acid, HSCN, soluble in water and having a pungent odor. [<THIO- + CYANIC] thi·o·gen (thī′ə·jen) n. A bacterial organism producing sulfur. [<THIO- + -GEN]

Thi·o·kol (thī′ə·kōl, -kol) n. A synthetic material consisting of organic polysulfides and resembling natural rubber in its physical properties: a trade name.

thi·ol (thī′ōl, -ol) n. Chem. Any of a class of sulfur compounds which are analogs of the alcohols and have the general formula RSH, in which R is a hydrocarbon radical: used largely in compounding, as ethanethiol, C_2H_5SH. Formerly called mercaptan. [<THI- + -OL[1]] thi·on·ic (thī·on′ik) adj. Chem. 1 Of, pertaining to, containing, or derived from sulfur. 2 Denoting any of a group of unstable acids having the general formula $H_2S_nO_6$. [<Gk. theion sulfur] thi·o·nine (thī′ə·nēn, -nin) n. Chem. A dark-green thiazine derivative, $C_{12}H_9N_3S$, made by synthesis, with a glistening metallic luster that yields purplish colors to silk and wool. Also thi′o·nin (-nin). [<Gk. theion sulfur + -INE[2]] thi·o·nyl (thī′ə·nil) n. Chem. The bivalent sulfur radical SO: also called sulfinyl. [<Gk. theion sulfur + -YL] thi·o·phene (thī′ə·fēn) n. Chem. A colorless liquid hydrocarbon, C_4H_4S, with an odor resembling that of benzene, found in coal tar and also made by synthesis. Also thi′o·phen (-fen). [<THIO- + PH(ENYL) + -ENE] thi·o·sin·am·ine (thī′ō·sin·am′in, -sin′ə·mēn) n. Chem. A crystalline compound, $C_4H_8N_2S$, formed by the union of allyl mustard oil and alcohol with ammonia: used in photography. Also thi′o·sin·am′in (-am′in). [<THIO- + Gk. sin(api) mustard + AMINE]
